TAAN TS5200	1.30mm	Silver	Synthetic Gut	 Single Core, Multi Wraps	A classic synthetic gut offers a traditional crisp feel at a very economical price-point.	$25
Prince Synthetic Gut with Duraflex	1.25mm	White	Synthetic Gut	 Single Core, Multi Wraps	With its phenomenal all-around playability, this is one of the best value strings of all time.	$35

(We are also specialising in hybrid stringing - two different strings in the mains and crosses, bringing the best of both Worlds!)

What is the right string and string tension for me?

This depends on many factors, including type of racquet, string patterns, your style of play, your targeted achievements(i.e control vs power), etc.

Once you decide what type of string to go for, it may take a few attempts to dial in your preferred tension - the one that feels right to enhance your game and enjoyment.

We will give you our best recommendation for an initial setup unless you already know what string and tension best suits your racquet.

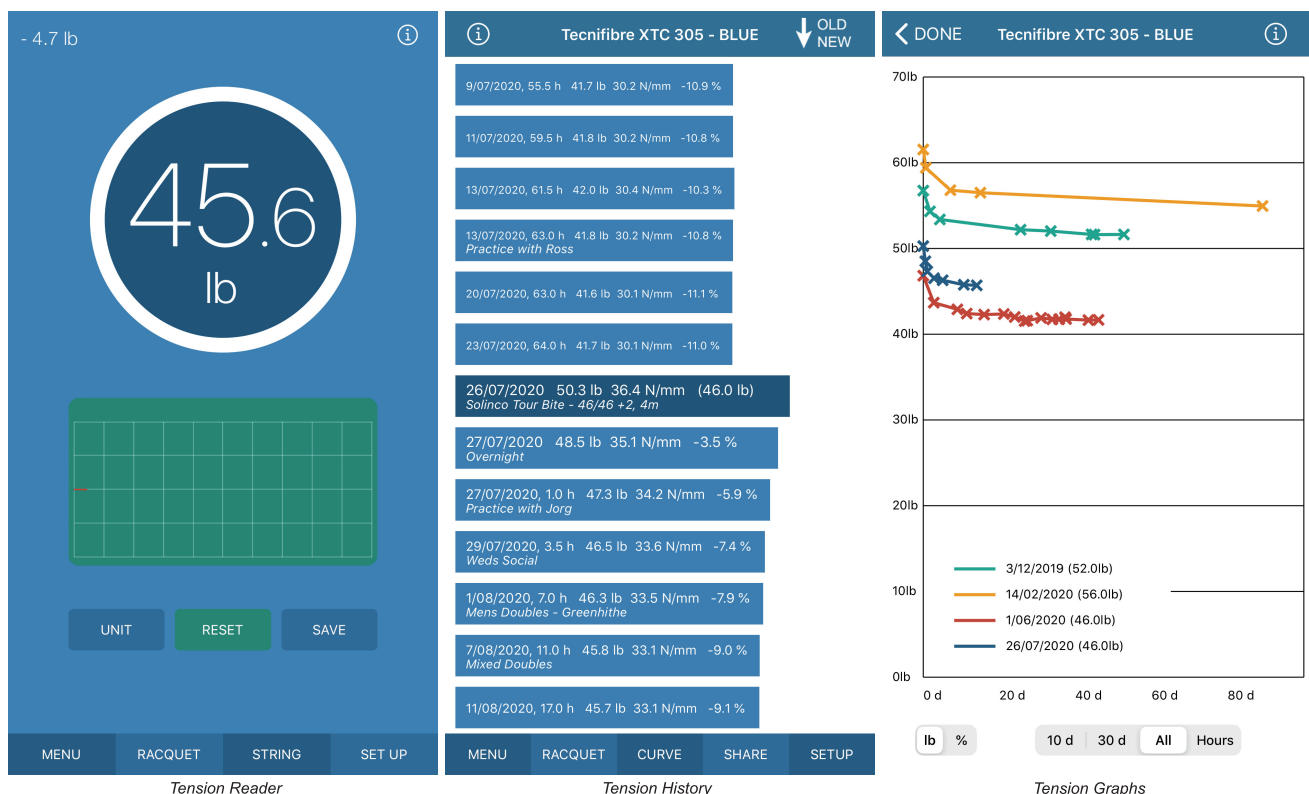

How long should a restring last?

This also depends on many factors, including type of string, strung tension, how hard you hit the ball, how often you play, playing conditions, etc.

Each type of string loses tension at different rates, and some strings are better at holding their tension. For example, natural gut and multifilament strings tend to do a terrific job maintaining their tension, while polyester strings typically don't.

The conventional rule of thumb is to restring as often per year as you play per week, but no less than twice per year.

We measure string tension right after a stringing job is done by two means; a tennis string tension meter and a more sophisticated sound waves recording device. So when you bump into us next time, we can tell you precisely if it needs restring - usually when it loses 15% off the strung tension.

Our Stringing Machine

Our stringing machine (Stringway ML100-T92 with Concorde system) is one of the most accurate machines on the market with a true constant pull drop weight tensioning system. Every stringing job is also done using Stringway Cross Stringing tool which helps avoid notching, damage to the strings, while keeping profiled poly-base strings from twisting while weaving.

About the stringer

I am a tennis enthusiast who has been hooked and developed a big tennis addiction in the past few years. I play socially and competitively, and recently have found myself intrigued by the science behind stringing tennis racquets. It is truly a great feeling playing with good fresh strings in the right settings. It has helped me develop my tennis skills immensely. I hope I can share the joy with you from my offerings.

To help promote tennis in our local community, I am also offering free stringing labour for our juniors(16 years old and under), who will only need to pay for the string chosen!

Happy hitting!
Moss R.
